One of the major issues regarding Muslims in the West is marriage. However, some of the complications that occur could be resolved by doing something prior to getting married-constructing a suitable marriage contract.

The question arises-what is a suitable contract? First, it should be understood that the marriage contract is oral. it is recommended, however, that the contract be written. The written contract is a measure to protect the rights of both the husband and the wife.

This is a text/contract book describing the realities of invalid marriages due to the incorrect understanding of an oral contract. The featured text provides four different types of oral/written contracts, in three English stylish fonts, including 1 font in Arabic. These contracts can be used during the actual wedding, and can be torn out to be saved and documented.
