Israeli Preoccupations: Dualities of a Confessional Citizen Haim Chertok

Ranging from the critical and adversarial to the credulous and celebratory, this collection of articles calculates a running tab of persistent Israeli preoccupations, chiefly, coming to terms with Palestinians, and the conditions facing women in the Jewish state. The essays are not so much confessional as they are intelligently and sensitively written in Chertok's own personal voice. Indeed most of his preoccupations are poignant observations born of the daily quirks, vexations, and beguilements of many years spent awakening and lying down inside a very particular town in the Negev. In the concluding section of his work, Chertok self-admittedly risks the saline fate of the Lot's spouse by concluding with several backward glances at the American Jewish community. In different form, portions of Israeli Preoccupations have appeared in a variety of journals, including Challenge, Congress Monthly, Hadassah, The Jerusalem Post, Jewish Frontier, The Jewish Review, Midstream, The Nation, The New York Times, and Tikkun.
