This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1883 edition. Excerpt: ... Colors of Insects. The Golor. As most insects are more or less colored, color is an important character. I have said purposely insects, and not arthropods, because my studies have not extended to the other groups. Some facts, of course, can be applied to all; but the other groups are not to be compared for the frequency and for the intensity of the colors with those of insects. There is no doubt that the different colors of insects are the consequence of the contact of the animal with air and light; or at least that colors are more strongly developed by both these factors. The only contrary Statement known to me is by Professor Sachs, and will be considered later. The influence of light is proved by the colorlessness of cave insects, of the larva? living in the earth or in the interior of plants or animals, even by some insects living only a very short time in the open air, as certain very small Ephemera and Diptera. It is proved by these facts that colors of organic bodies, plants, and animals are found prominently in their external coverings. Therefore the Greek philosophers considered color to be the product of a chemical action, called by them m'xpig, boiling. The interior of organic bodies is mostly colorless or discolored. There exist, indeed, exceptions even in insects, but at least a part of these internal colors is to be found in places which are in contact with the air. The tracheas in Odonata and others are red; the fat body in Trichois red, in Zerene yellow, in Pentatoma green; the Malpighian vessels in some Orthoptera green; the testicles in some Hemerobina, at least in the previous stages, lemon yellow; the anal glands in Osmylus black; the blood in Chironomus red. In other Orders we find some internal Organs of...
