Through Their Eyes: Factors Affecting Muslim Support for the U.S.-led War on Terror Michael G. Elasmr

What Influences Muslims Support for the U.S.-Led War on Terror? That was the key question mass communication scholar Michael Elasmr sought to answer when he analyzed data on citizens in seven countries with substantial Muslim populations, including Lebanon, Egypt, Turkey, Indonesia, Pakistan, Nigeria, and Senegal. Using a theory-driven quantitative structural model, Elasmr found that Muslims support for the U.S.-led war on terror is higher among Muslims who have more positive attitudes toward the United States, who believe the United States is not ignoring the interests of their countries and who consume more U.S. entertainment media. Through Their Eyes is one of the most significant studies to emerge from the research since the 9/11 terrorist attacks and no doubt will have public policy makers, diplomats, citizens, scholars and students pondering the results for years to come.
